

A black handheld radio, likely a walkie-talkie, is shown from the back. It has a long, thin antenna extending from the top. A black strap is attached to the left side. The back panel features a large, rectangular, slightly raised area in the center, possibly a speaker or a large button. To the right of this area, there is a smaller, rectangular button with the text "PUSH TO TALK" printed on it. The radio has a rugged, industrial design with visible screws and a textured surface.
