Request for non-disclosure persuant to 0.457 and 0.459

We hereby request to make the documents we filed not available for public inspection. Those files, especially the (1) schematics, (2) block diagram, (3) operational description and (4) internal photos contain trade secrets, which are not available to our competitors under normal circumstances.

One of our major competitors is located in the USA and sells a similar product, but with considerable bigger size and much more complicated to install. We have developed a product, which in addition is much less susceptible to false alarming. If this competitor could review the files as stated above, they would be in a position to use our know-how and incorporate it into their product. A skilled engineer can read from a schematics like from a book.

I actually do not know how difficult it is to get acces to FCC filings, but I have seen instances when a competitor was able to get the filings for purposes other than intended. It is therefore my concern that FCC will not be misused to gain unfair advantage over a competitor.
