PEEP Controller

The PEEP Controller is a system that secures the data on a computer screen if the computer operator leaves his workstation.

The operator wears a small transmitter which communicates with a receiver which is connected between the computer and the monitor.

When the operator walks outside a pre-set range, the transmitter looses signal and blocks the video signal to the computer monitor. When the operator returns, the video signal to the monitor is on again.